For Kering, "Empowering Imagination" goes far beyond our signature. It's a value that we live by, and that we seek for our employees, our Houses, our customers.

Imagination is at the very heart of our business model, our success and the mindset that drives us. Only imagination can enable people to express new ideas, to invent new models and to find original solutions. It gives us the power to create and innovate, to surprise and to motivate.

And it's why we encourage each of our 38,000 employees to keep their sense of a child's view of the world. A perspective that is sincere and authentic, curious and audacious.
Seeing the world through the eyes of a child...
...means wanting to change the world

Seeing the world through the eyes of a child...
...means never giving up on your dreams
Seeing the world through the eyes of a child... means handing power over to your imagination.
Summary
In 2019, Kering once again demonstrated the relevance of its business model. The Group’s revenue totaled €15.9 billion, an increase of 13.3% on a comparable basis with 2018. This growth was driven by all our business segments. Our recurring operating income reached a historical high of €4.8 billion, an increase of 19.6%. In four years, our operating income has increased threefold, and our Houses’ sales have doubled.

We owe this excellent performance to our strong corporate culture, built on an ambitious drive for innovation. Above all, these results reflect the commitment and talent of our 38,000 employees. I would like to sincerely thank each and every one of them. With these key assets, Kering can maintain high levels of growth over the long term.

Competitive thanks to our multi-brand model

This outstanding growth is the product of our integrated business model and the decisive advantage it gives us. Drawing on the Group’s synergies, our complementary Houses are achieving healthy organic growth, fueled by creativity, innovation and flawless execution.

Gucci, which will mark its 100th anniversary in 2021, remains the backbone of our portfolio. The House delivered a performance in line with its ambitions, generating 13.3% growth in revenue on a comparable basis—a milestone made all the more remarkable since Gucci more than doubled its sales between 2016 and 2019. This tremendous momentum is driven by the brand’s digital excellence, its constant innovation, and of course, its exceptional collections.

Saint Laurent doubled its sales in four years, topping the €2 billion mark. Through its distinctive identity and an ability to combine the core values of its heritage with uncompromising contemporary design, the House still has immense untapped potential.

Bottega Veneta has been totally reinvented with the arrival of Creative Director Daniel Lee, in June 2018. This renewed creativity has proved successful with ultra-desirable collections and a return to growth. Such success demonstrates that our efforts and investment can reinvigorate the brand in the medium term.
Our Other Houses recorded revenue of €2.3 billion, an increase of 17.8% on a comparable basis. Within this, two growth drivers stand out. Following its staggering development in 2018, Balenciaga continued its impressive growth, achieving a major sales milestone in 2019. Meanwhile, Alexander McQueen continued its impressive growth trajectory throughout the year. Our Jewelry Houses also contributed to the Group’s growth, performing superbly, while our Watch Manufactures have reinforced their reputation and positioning. We intend to step up our investment to develop our brands, with a specific focus on accelerating distribution and communication.

Lastly, Kering Eyewear, which has been fully operational for just four years, is cementing its status as a forward-thinking and key player in eyewear.

Making Kering the most influential Luxury group
We remain confident in the trends now happening in our industry. Furthermore, we are convinced of our core business, as our financial results are complemented by an ambitious sustainability strategy and an unwavering commitment to a range of issues affecting the environment and society.

Three years after announcing a new set of targets in our sustainability strategy (see pages 21-23), we published our first progress report outlining our accomplishments and the challenges that lie ahead. Among the major breakthroughs, between 2015 and 2018 we reduced our overall impact by 14% in E&P&L intensity. For the same period, we also reduced our global greenhouse gas emissions (boutiques and other locations) by 77% in E&P&L intensity. These indicators are proof that we are on track to meet our targets. In 2019, our commitment and efforts were recognized by the Group’s presence, for the third consecutive year, on the Carbon Disclosure Project’s Climate Change A-List. Kering also remains the leading company in the Textile, Apparel and Luxury sector in the Corporate Knights ranking of the Global 100 most sustainable corporations in the world.

Our economy and markets must ride out uncertainties, whether in the form of changes in customs regulations, currency fluctuations or geopolitical tensions. The Covid-19 epidemic, although it does not call
The world of Luxury is changing faster than ever. A new generation of consumers has emerged. What they demand is authenticity, with transparency and constant dialogue across all channels. As a result, Luxury brands must strive to engage more closely and more personally with their customers, sparking emotion and creating exceptional experiences both in brick-and-mortar boutiques and online. This approach calls for rethinking distribution channels as well as cultivating customer relations in new and innovative ways.

Three growth levers
Kering's strong 2019 results once again demonstrate the relevance of a business model that combines agility, balance and responsibility in addition to an approach founded on long-term strategy and responsiveness.

At Kering, we are driven by two guiding principles: enhancing synergies and prioritizing organic growth. Propelled by the Group, our Houses are ideally positioned to capitalize on market opportunities and deliver robust performances. To further support its Houses and improve the efficiency of their activities, Kering has identified three main growth levers: digital; information systems; and the logistics and supply chain.

Accelerating digital transformation
Kering's new digital strategy is based on three pillars:
- online visibility, across social media in particular;
- the development of online sales;
- leveraging artificial intelligence and big data.

In digital, the Group's Houses have upscaled their media investment strategy over the past several years. In 2019, digital accounted for approximately 55% of total media expenditure, due mainly to increased presence on social media platforms. In 2019, for the first time, online sales accounted for more than 5% of brands' revenue. In growth terms, this represented an average of nearly 50% over the last four years. To offer customers the best possible e-retail experience, the Group made the decision to fully internalize all of its e-commerce activities. Following the test and migration stages that began in Fall 2019, the preliminary rollout is scheduled for 2020. Lastly, Kering continues to explore new strategies for leveraging customer relations, including through artificial intelligence solutions and Customer Relationship Management (CRM).

Rethinking information systems
The second set of initiatives focuses on the complete overhaul of Kering’s information systems. The process is already underway, and the challenge lies in harmonizing solutions, providing access to real-time data, and increasing security. In 2019, we achieved many milestones. These included:
- The worldwide implementation of a unified infrastructure that grants real-time access to a single data source;
- Adopting a suite of leading-edge, integrated IT solutions. These solutions are more flexible, more cost-effective, and diminish the risk of obsolescence.
- Upskilling in-house expertise.
- Upgrading cybersecurity systems and procedures.

Redesigning logistics and supply chains
To meet increasing volume demands and to manage and streamline the entire logistics process, the Group is developing its infrastructure by investing in new facilities in Europe, North America and Asia.

In October 2019, Kering relocated its North American logistics center to Wayne, New Jersey. These new warehouses obtained LEED (Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design) gold certification, thereby demonstrating the buildings' environmental quality.
As of 2020, the Group will also open a state-of-the-art logistics hub in Trecate, in northern Italy. To meet growth in volume, the new platform will have larger storage capacity. Within the next two years, we will inaugurate other centers in the Asia-Pacific region and the Middle East. Once re-engineering has been completed, Kering’s logistics network will ensure faster distribution across all channels, in addition to improved product availability and optimized stock levels. At the same time, the hub will facilitate access to services across multiple channels.

Realizing Luxury’s full potential

Through the strength of its integrated model, the Group supports its Houses so that they can unleash their creative energy and focus on what is essential: creativity, excellence in execution, customer relations and communication. All of these factors strengthen Kering’s capacity to harness Luxury’s full potential and grow faster than its markets.

In 2017, Kering unveiled its 2025 sustainability strategy with ambitious targets and a commitment to share progress every three years. In early 2020, the Group published a progress report. Initial results are promising: Kering has reduced its environmental impact by 14% in EP&L intensity. At the same time, the Group cut greenhouse gas emissions from operations by 77% in EP&L intensity. In addition to these overall indicators, we achieved progress in all three pillars of our sustainability strategy.

Care for the planet

First and foremost, in order to reduce its environmental impact and preserve the planet’s resources, Kering adheres to a set of high standards covering raw materials, manufacturing processes and animal welfare. These standards provide a framework, measuring the Group’s progress in traceability, working conditions, environmental protection, animal welfare and the use of chemical substances. With an 88% traceability score for its key raw materials at end-2019, Kering is on track to meet its 100% goal. The Group also achieved 100% responsible gold purchase. And in French Guiana, Kering provided all the funding for a reforestation project at a mining site, in collaboration with the Mina Verde initiative. Kering has also set up the South Gobi Cashmere Project with the Wildlife Conservation Society, Rio Tinto, Stanford University and NASA. The challenge: to restore high-quality cashmere production by helping herders minimize the impact of their activity on nature through the adoption of more responsible practices. For five years, Kering has worked alongside 170 families of herders and NGOs to improve fiber quality, pasture management and biodiversity conservation. Results have been highly positive: yields have surged and herders’ living standards have improved. Lastly, as of 2018, Kering became entirely carbon neutral as a Group in its operations and across its supply chain. This milestone was primarily achieved through measures aimed at avoiding or reducing emissions, followed by offsetting remaining emissions every year.

Collaborate with people
The Collaborate pillar in our sustainability strategy is founded upon a conviction: that close collaboration with stakeholders ensures Kering’s higher economic, environmental and social performance. This is why the Group champions equality and diversity, and strives to be an employer of choice.

Kering is actively involved in global industry initiatives and is expanding its partnerships with schools and universities. The Group launched the very first MOOC (Massive Open Online Course) in Luxury fashion and sustainability in 2018 with the London College of Fashion. The MOOC is intended for fashion and luxury professionals, students and, more generally, anyone interested in sustainable fashion. Through a mix of videos, podcasts and editorial content, the challenges of “Tomorrow’s Luxury” are highlighted alongside the required practices and tools. The course is free and open-access, and is available in English and Chinese. So far, more than 33,000 learners from 150 countries have participated. In 2019, Kering also partnered with the Institut Français de la Mode to launch the IFM-Kering Sustainability Chair. This position seeks to foster a first-class research and teaching center that incorporates all aspects of sustainability and corporate social responsibility. Today, faced with such challenges, no actor can make progress alone. This is why Kering strives to establish virtuous alliances and change attitudes. The Fashion Pact presented to heads of state at the Biarritz G7 Summit in August 2019 is a prime example of this strategy. This historic coalition, which gathered over 250 brands from global fashion and textile companies, was formed by François-Henri Pinault at the request of President Emmanuel Macron.

Create new innovations
The Group’s Create pillar means forging innovative alternatives, driving change to influence the entire industry, and sharing knowledge via an open-source approach. In 2013, Kering unveiled the Materials Innovation Lab (MIL). The MIL is both a library of sustainable fabrics and a driver of change within a complex supply chain. The MIL leverages quality through constant dialogue with the Group’s suppliers. The goal: to encourage traceability and the sourcing of more sustainable and innovative materials. To date, the Houses’ creative teams have access to an archive of 3,800 samples. The Lab helps to drive change in Luxury by working with cross-industry organizations and sustainability collaborations, such as Textile Exchange and the Ellen MacArthur Foundation. A similar platform has just opened for the Group’s Watches and Jewelry activities: the Sustainable Innovation Lab.

Kering is also a partner of the Fashion for Good - Plug and Play accelerator. The objective of this initiative is to identify and support startups with high potential while fast-tracking sustainable innovation. To fuel momentum, the Group focused on China, a source of innovation and a key player in the textiles industry. At Shanghai Fashion Week in November 2019, Kering and Plug and Play held the first K Generation Award ceremony. The mission: to recognize and support Chinese startups that affect positive change to accelerate sustainable innovation in the fashion industry.

More than ever, through its vision and its actions, Kering is firmly committed to sustainability—from local initiatives to global partnerships, and from historic industries to startups. The eyes of the world are on the Luxury sector. It has the power to inspire new best practices and influence other actors. At Kering, we are aware of such responsibility: it drives our strategy forward.

One out of three women worldwide is a victim of violence during her lifetime. Since its creation in 2008, the Kering Foundation has made this critical issue the focus of its combat by supporting survivors, and rolling out prevention initiatives and worldwide mobilization. To maximize its impact, the Foundation works hand-in-hand with long-term partners for a minimum period of three years in six countries: China, France, Italy, Mexico, the United Kingdom and the United States.

Supporting survivors
In 2019, the Foundation reinforced its partnerships with local organizations that provide tailored support for women impacted by violence. The Foundation implements a three-pronged approach: funding frontline, national organizations specialized in combating domestic violence; backing pilot initiatives, and partnering with Women’s Funds that support grassroots initiatives. The Foundation is a longstanding partner of the National Network to End Domestic Violence (United States), the Fédération Nationale Solidarité Femmes (France), Donne in Rete Contro la Violenza (Italy) and Women’s Aid (United Kingdom).

The Kering Foundation also advocates for new approaches, like the Maison des Femmes in Saint-Denis, outside Paris. With its fifty-strong team of professionals working across a range of sectors, this space is a one-stop safe place offering a wide range of services for survivors, ensuring they are listened to, cared for and offered comprehensive guidance. As a founding partner, the Foundation in 2019 extended its support to the creation of a new unit dedicated to treating adults who as children were victims of sexual abuse.

Lastly, the Kering Foundation takes action at a grassroots level via the Women’s Funds network, for example through the HER Fund in Hong Kong, which supports local micro-organizations run by marginalized women who are victims of violence.

Preventing violence by working with younger generations
Since 2018, the Kering Foundation has stepped up its involvement in prevention programs aimed at young people and, specifically, boys and young men. In New York, the Foundation is continuing its support of The New York City Alliance Against Sexual Assault and Project Dream, Own, Tell (DOT), which works with young people from underserved communities on initiatives targeting sexual violence. The Foundation also partners with Promundo and its curriculum, Manhood 2.0, which encourages young men to think beyond the rigid divisions of gender and build healthier relationships based on respect and equality. Lastly, in Mexico, support continues for Gendes, which seeks to redefine the notion of masculinity for men.

Mobilizing across the globe
Through its internal and external campaigns, the Foundation aims to raise awareness of violence against women, changing mentalities and behaviors. In 2018, the Kering Foundation joined forces with Fondation agir contre l’exclusion (FACE) to create OneInThreeWomen, the first European network to encourage companies to support female employees who are victims of violence with concrete measures. In 2019, the network revealed the results of a study sent to more than 40,000 employees across six companies in six countries. Results: 16% of the women and 4% of the men surveyed reported experiences of domestic violence; 16% of women and 13% of men interviewed stated that they knew of a colleague who had been affected. Companies have a leading role to play in establishing concrete measures and a supportive workplace. With this in mind, since 2011 the Foundation has provided Kering’s employees with training to understand the impact of domestic violence on the workplace. To date, 1,500 employees have benefited from these training sessions co-created with local specialist organizations.

Last but not least, the Foundation uses the International Day for the Elimination of Violence against Women as a platform to raise public awareness. In 2019, in collaboration with Modern Films, the Kering Foundation launched 16 Days, 16 Films, a short film initiative addressing violence against women.
The Houses
The opening of Gucci’s first jewelry boutique accompanied the launch of Alessandro Michele’s debut High Jewelry collection, the 200-piece Hortus Deliciarum. Sharing a common theme of a mythical garden in full bloom, his vibrantly colorful fashion designs sit alongside the fine jewelry collection. To complement the richly-hued gemstones, the interior décor is elegantly muted, featuring dark wood cabinets with brass details and a marble floor in black and white mosaic.

With its centennial just around the corner in 2021, Gucci has grown from its Florentine roots into one of the world’s leading luxury Houses for fashion and accessories. Since 2015, a very successful creative and commercial dynamic has developed under Creative Director Alessandro Michele and President and CEO Marco Bizzarri. Gucci’s focus on artistic freedom, self-expression and innovation is reflected not only in its portfolio but also in the brand’s significant online presence. Their leadership has enabled Gucci to engage highly effectively with consumers around the world, providing a consistent, appealing brand narrative across all touchpoints and deepening the conversation with its various audiences.

In 2019, the House maintained its policy of innovation, notably with the introduction of a make-up line and the opening of its first jewelry boutique on the Place Vendôme in Paris (see above). Gucci also continued the rollout of its new store concept, which brings products and customers closer together, creating a more intimate dynamic. Travel retail delivered the highest segment growth, amid a renovation program, while Gucci Pin pop-up stores were introduced in major cities around the world. In the digital space, e-commerce sales grew significantly, courtesy of an increase in the number of countries and the quality of the user experience, both in terms of functionality and storytelling. New relationships were built with key e-commerce sites and a partnership agreement was signed with the Internet-based company Tencent, which owns the WeChat platform. The year also saw the rollout of Gucci’s new global client service center, based in Florence, with regional hubs in the US, Korea, Japan and Southeast Asia.

In terms of social responsibility, two highlights of 2019 were in the areas of sustainability and diversity. In September, Gucci announced that it would become entirely carbon neutral, including its entire supply chain. This follows a commitment to offset greenhouse gas emissions from its own operations and those of its suppliers by supporting forest conservation and biodiversity projects around the world. To help fulfill Gucci’s mission to create a corporate culture where diversity and inclusion can flourish, the company appointed Renée Tirado as Global Head of Diversity, Equity & Inclusion. Her role, which is to help develop a more diverse workforce, also reflects Gucci’s broader vision of creating Luxury that is both inclusive and fully in step with the contemporary world.
Conceived as creative and cultural destinations, new Saint Laurent Rive Droite boutiques were opened on the Rue Saint-Honoré in Paris and Rodeo Drive in Los Angeles. These spaces introduce a new concept for expression, exchange and lifestyle by offering a wide range of products including exclusive pieces, limited editions, a bookstore, vintage, music, and photography alongside art, performances, exhibitions, events and cultural happenings. Through an extensive and diversified offer from various creative and design fields, Anthony Vaccarello imagines and embraces new ways of expanding the universe and DNA of Saint Laurent.

SAINT LAURENT

Created as a Haute Couture House in 1961, Yves Saint Laurent revolutionized modern fashion from the mid-1960s onward by introducing luxury ready-to-wear under the Saint Laurent Rive Gauche brand. Today, the House has a global retail network, with flagship stores in all the major destinations for luxury fashion.

Creatively, Saint Laurent’s core values include a focus on youth, the ability to bring couture to the street, and a style that resonates with modern times. Anthony Vaccarello, its Creative Director since 2016, has successfully brought in a contemporary esthetic while remaining fully aligned with these values and the heritage of the House. His collections have been embraced both by longstanding customers and by newcomers to the world of Saint Laurent. Furthermore, the Spring/Summer 2020 collection ranked #1 in Vogue’s list of most-viewed runways online. To meet growing demand, Saint Laurent in 2019 enhanced its retail network with store openings and refurbishments in both emerging and mature markets, including the innovative new Saint Laurent Rive Droite boutiques in France and the US (see above). Its presence in China was reinforced with new points of sale and the opening of its first flagship stores in Shanghai and Beijing. At the same time, the House also strengthened its position in the digital space. By year-end, Saint Laurent had e-commerce websites in more than 50 countries.

Looking ahead, Saint Laurent will further develop its creative vision, notably through the SELF initiative, which restores art as a core value for the brand, and in which artists are invited to portray the spirit of the House. Following collaborations with Daido Moriyama, Vanessa Beecroft and Bret Easton Ellis, the most recent works presented, at the Festival de Cannes and at the Shanghai International Film Festival respectively, were by Gaspar Noé and Wong Kar-Wai.
2019 began in the transitional period before Daniel Lee's collection became available in-store. The first new handbags introduced for the Spring/Summer 2019 collection (the Maxi Cabat and The Pouch) immediately garnered a positive response. Bottega Veneta has since enjoyed strong growth and increased presence within the industry, with Daniel Lee paving the way for a bold new era with his unique creative vision.

Established in 1966 in Vicenza, Italy, Bottega Veneta is renowned for its unparalleled leather and signature intrecciato. Bold, essential and immediate, Bottega Veneta's collections combine luxurious materials with the masterful touch of artisans. Embedded in Italian luxury, the House embraces a core philosophy of refined discretion, confidence and innovation for women, men and the home. Contemporary designs reflect an elevated reality, building a utopian wardrobe made for wearing every day.

In June 2018, Daniel Lee was appointed Creative Director of the House. Previously Director of Ready-to-Wear Design at Céline, the British-born graduate of Central Saint Martins College of Art and Design established a powerful new perspective for the brand in less than half a year. Following his first full collection— for Pre-Fall 2019, unveiled in late 2018—Lee’s vision continues to respect Bottega Veneta's rich heritage of Italian craftsmanship and culture while championing evolution with a global outlook. Brand connoisseurs will find familiarity in the expert leatherwork of supple bags and discreet accessories. New initiates will be drawn in by Lee’s sensuous and uncompromising approach to ready-to-wear.

Bottega Veneta brings contemporary and considered designs to clients around the world. In 2018, the brand opened its two largest stores to date on Madison Avenue in New York City and in Tokyo’s Ginza district. Since Daniel Lee laid the foundations of an unapologetic new era with his first runway show for the Fall/Winter 2019 collection, Bottega Veneta has continued to expand its reach beyond singular products with unique concept stores, pop-ups, cafés and Maisons. In September 2019, a compelling response from the international press and buyers at the Spring 2020 collection underscored the brand’s new momentum. Three months later, Bottega Veneta and Daniel Lee swept all four categories for which they were nominated at the annual British Fashion Awards: Brand of the Year, Designer of the Year, British Womenswear Designer of the Year and Accessories Designer of the Year.
In September 2019, in an all-blue set echoing the European Parliament, the Spring/Summer 2020 show explored the idea of power dressing, reimagining the look of today’s corporate dress codes and showcasing new archetypes. Irrespective of profession, what one wears in the corporate world has the same transformational power as a uniform: this is the message Demna Gvasalia wished to convey with a collection called New Fashion Uniforms. The Artistic Director transforms everyday attire by presenting a new shoulder line for dresses, redesigned suits and a new sneaker style, the Tyrex, which combines sportswear elements with a classic shoe.

Balenciaga has always occupied a unique place in the world of fashion. Founded as a Haute Couture House in Spain in 1917 by Cristóbal Balenciaga and established in Paris in 1937, the House enjoyed a true renaissance in the late 1990s by reconnecting with the fashion world and ready-to-wear while developing new lines of accessories and shoes.

In 2015, the arrival of Demna Gvasalia as Artistic Director opened a new chapter in the House's history. Gvasalia is recognized throughout the industry for his creative vision, expert use of volume and craftsmanship, and his approach to combining heritage and innovation, which has garnered tremendous critical and commercial success.

In 2019, Balenciaga continued to expand its distribution network. The House opened boutiques in Asia and the United States, including a flagship on Madison Avenue in New York City. Several boutiques have also been renovated using Demna Gvasalia's store concept, which blends modernity, couture heritage and industrial design. Balenciaga increased its presence in the most prestigious department stores in Europe, Canada, Japan and Asia. Another key milestone was the sharp increase in visitors to balenciaga.com. The site is available in 100 countries and the number of visitors continues to rise steadily. Throughout 2019, Balenciaga continued its momentum and attained an important new threshold in terms of revenue. And in 2020, the House plans to secure prime locations in mature markets and Asia, while also building on the success of the Hourglass leather goods line launched in 2019.
A highlight of 2019 was the exhibition in November at the Alexander McQueen Old Bond Street store. Entitled Roses, it brought together rose-inspired creations by the House’s founder, Lee Alexander McQueen, and Sarah Burton. Sumptuous dresses, including some of the House’s most iconic creations, were showcased alongside videos, editorial content, moodboards and photographs to illustrate how various pieces had been produced and highlight the House’s savoir-faire.

ALEXANDER McQUEEN

A House that is synonymous with modern British Couture, Alexander McQueen has been led by Sarah Burton since her appointment as Creative Director in 2010. Her collections have won widespread critical acclaim for their focus on storytelling, experimentation and traditional artisanal techniques. The strength of the House, which was launched in 1992, lies in a coherent, distinctive silhouette that informs designs across product categories.

As of 2019, the brand was present in more than 50 countries, supported by a new retail concept developed by Sarah Burton, in which the brand’s narrative approach forms part of a unique customer journey through a physical space. Launched at its flagship store on London’s Old Bond Street, the concept has now been introduced at major new boutiques in Dubai, Shanghai and Hong Kong, with further openings planned in 2020. At Old Bond Street, her vision of open access installations and collaborative immersion has been translated into an extensive program for visitors about the history and skills underpinning the House (see above).

Alexander McQueen has also developed a highly successful digital strategy, both on its own platforms and across social media, including Chinese platforms such as Weibo and WeChat. Meanwhile, its e-commerce site has been the House’s number one store in terms of revenue since 2018. In 2020, the House will relaunch its MCQ label as a global creative collective using a disruptive and innovative approach.

Under Sarah Burton’s creative leadership, Alexander McQueen has retained its original uncompromising style. At the same time, the House’s design codes have evolved with lightness and a distinctive, authentic touch to introduce a new esthetic. In 2019, Sarah Burton’s talent and vision were recognized with two accolades: the CFDA International Designer Award and the Trailblazer Award at The British Fashion Awards.
Italian tailor Nazareno Fonticoli and entrepreneur Gaetano Savini founded Brioni in Rome in 1945 with a desire to challenge the status quo in menswear. In 1952, it became the first men’s luxury brand to stage a fashion show and pushed traditional wardrobe boundaries by introducing bright colors and new fabrics. Today the House’s offer ranges from men’s apparel, leather goods and shoes to its Bespoke tailoring service. All products are meticulously handmade by expert artisans, primarily at Brioni’s ateliers in Penne, a small town in Abruzzo.

Under Design Director Norbert Stumpfl, the Fall/Winter 2019 and Spring/Summer 2020 collections brought a fresh artistic vision to Brioni’s traditional strengths of unrivalled craftsmanship, subtlety and a distinctly Roman nonchalance. Updated House codes and a touch of informality in fine tailoring, ready-to-wear and eveningwear won critical acclaim. The new spirit and tone were set by Hollywood actor Matt Dillon, who featured in the Tailoring Legends campaign for the Fall/Winter 2019 collection. The House’s renewal has also been reflected in a year-long renovation of its London flagship, an important showcase in a retail network that spans Western Europe, North America, Asia and the Middle East.

As the House celebrates its 75th anniversary, 2020 will see Brioni further expanding its artistic and commercial horizons. A high-profile start to the year included a return to Pitti Uomo, a key event for menswear, with the unveiling of the Fall/Winter 2020 collection. Also in January, Brioni’s latest advertising campaign introduced Brad Pitt as its new brand ambassador, ensuring global media attention for the House. Brioni will continue to broaden its vision of Luxury with the launch of a new perfume line developed under a licensing agreement with Lalique.
The Jack de Boucheron collection presented in April 2019 inaugurated the brand’s next chapter. Jack is the new “wear-it-your-way” icon, with a golden wire connected by a clasp inspired by an audio jack. Jack de Boucheron is a bracelet, a necklace, a headpiece and much more, depending on its wearer’s mood and outfit. It gives every woman the freedom to have fun, and to be herself by choosing her own jewelry codes.

Renowned for its masterful gem cutting and jewelry designs, Boucheron in 1893 became the first major contemporary jeweler to open a boutique on Paris’s prestigious Place Vendôme. Since its founding in 1858 by Frédéric Boucheron, freedom has been at the heart of the House’s creative vision—in terms of esthetics and technique as well as the liberty that transcends traditional codes and conventions.

2019 was a pivotal year for the brand. In addition to the launch of the daring Jack de Boucheron collection (see above), Creative Director Claire Choisne unveiled the creative High Jewelry collection Paris Vu du 26 during Haute Couture week in July. Four boutiques were also renovated in the style of the new ‘family home’ store concept that informed last year’s renovation of the historic Place Vendôme flagship. Boucheron also made its American comeback by opening a corner in Saks on New York’s prestigious Fifth Avenue. Lastly, the brand remains focused on increasing its foothold in Asia.

In February, the House released a global advertising campaign embodying the spirit of freedom found in its creations to support its 2019 launches. As photographed by Oliver Hadlee Pearch, Andreea Diaconu is the epitome of elegance and empowerment.
Launched in 1994, the DoDo brand is specialized in small, delicate pieces that can be mixed and matched. Innovations in 2019 included a new ‘tree’ charm, which was launched with a campaign entitled A Tree for a Tree in partnership with the global tree-planting platform Treedom. With each purchase of a charm, a tree is planted—a practical measure for environmental conservation that underscores the brand’s commitment to sustainability. Created using responsibly-sourced gold and 12 responsibly-sourced sapphires, this piece and the accompanying campaign are helping to expand the DoDo Forest. Clients may follow the growth of their tree online.

Globally renowned for its creativity and distinctive blend of colorful gemstones, Pomellato was the first House to bring a ready-to-wear philosophy to the world of fine jewelry. An avant-garde approach to design and the use of large stones—the brand’s hallmarks since its founding in 1967—make Pomellato pieces instantly recognizable. Their modern yet unconventional beauty is handcrafted by expert goldsmiths at Casa Pomellato, the House’s Milan headquarters. To help ensure the continuity of that craftsmanship, Pomellato has partnered with the Galdus Goldsmith Academy to provide programs, seminars and apprenticeships to promising young artisans in Milan.

The House’s portfolio is based on four core collections: Iconica, Nudo, Tango and Sabbia, with a separate offer for the DoDo brand of small, delicate pieces that are designed to be mixed and matched in a playful accumulation (see above). Recently, the main collections have been further extended to include more designs in gold. Because sustainability and social responsibility are key values for Pomellato, the House has been using 100% responsibly-sourced gold since 2018. Pomellato’s digital strategy was a major focus of 2019, and it proved a highly effective way of engaging with a core target market of fashion-oriented consumers and with Millennials in particular. The main driver of the strategy was a communication platform, #PomellatoForWomen, which first launched in 2017 to mark the House’s 50th anniversary. A celebration of women’s diversity and authenticity, it featured real-world, strong, independent women of all ages, and reached audiences across digital platforms. This year will also see the House launch its first High Jewelry collection, positioning the brand as an unconventional player in the world of Haute Couture jewels. Lastly, in 2020, Pomellato will further develop its presence in Asian markets.
By opening a boutique on the Place Vendôme in Paris, the ultimate address for fine jewelry, Qeelin has created a space where East meets West. While retaining all the original architectural features of the Place Vendôme, the boutique integrates décors, colors and furnishings that accentuate the brand’s Chinese heritage. Echoes of Beijing’s traditional narrow streets blend with Twenties-era Art Deco, while pieces from the brand’s core collections are presented in different settings, evoking the playfulness of a treasure hunt.

Qeelin

Founded in 2004, Qeelin creates fine jewelry for everyday wear that blends traditional Chinese symbols with stylish, modern designs and a playful touch. The brand, which takes its name from the Qilin, a mythical Chinese animal and an icon of love, focuses on three core collections, each of which highlights Qeelin’s cultural heritage.

The Wulu collection draws on the Chinese gourd, a symbol of good fortune and positive energy, with contemporary curves that echo an 8, the luckiest number in Chinese culture. Yu Yi takes its inspiration from the symbolism of a lock in traditional Chinese iconography—a bringer of good luck. Finally, the central motif of the Bo Bo collection is the country’s celebrated panda. Named after the word for ‘precious’, bao, it evokes the beauty of childlike innocence and curiosity. Together, Qeelin’s collections express a desire to embrace fashion trends and create a space for traditional Chinese culture in today’s luxury world.

The brand expanded in 2019 by opening new boutiques and marked its 15th anniversary by becoming the first Chinese jeweler present on the Place Vendôme, the French capital’s historic showcase for fine jewelry (see above). By year-end, Qeelin had over 40 boutiques and shop-in-shops, 34 of them in Greater China. A media highlight was the appearance of Founder and Creative Director Dennis Chan on the Chinese TV channel CCTV2’s Fashion Master, which generated over 17 million views on video platforms and more than 220 million mentions on social media.

This year also saw new additions to the Wulu portfolio, with a limited-edition Jade Place Vendôme necklace, a Bamboo Lace pendant and a colorful series of pieces in jade and red agate. The unisex Wulu bracelet extended the range to a male audience, while Hip Bo Bo became the latest member of the Bo Bo Gang.

In 2020, Qeelin aims to expand further in Greater China and to enhance its e-commerce operations. Key product launches will focus on Wulu rings, the Double Wulu collection, a new Cannes Couture collection and a series of collaborations.
In January 2019, Ulysse Nardin reinvented the rules of the watchmaking industry with the launch of Freak X and Skeleton X at Geneva’s Salon International de la Haute Horlogerie. The X collections embody disruption and are intended for those who dare to be different. Their positioning is accessible to a younger clientele that expects innovation. In early 2020, the X series expanded with the release of new X models in the Diver collection.

Since its founding in 1846, Ulysse Nardin’s renown has come from its close ties to the nautical world. The standard-bearer in watchmaking excellence, it is a pioneer for its use of leading-edge technology and innovative materials such as silicon. A member of the Fondation de la Haute Horlogerie, the Manufacture creates marine chronometers that are highly prized by collectors and are among the most reliable ever made. With the in-house expertise that is key to producing high-precision components and movements, Ulysse Nardin continues a quest for perfection, centered around five collections: the Marine, the Diver, the Classic, the Executive and the Freak.

In 2019, the opening of five flagships—four directly operated in China and Geneva, plus a franchise in Dubai—offered an opportunity to unveil a bright and airy architectural concept that subtly nods to the sea. The Swiss watchmaker continued to enhance its distribution network with renovations to 50 corners and other points of sale. By year-end, 100 retail spaces leveraged the brand’s image worldwide. Another highlight of 2019 was a website redesign. Users now enjoy access to a fast, ergonomic site designed for mobile traffic; the e-commerce function will go live in 2020, marking the final phase of a marketing strategy focused on digital.

During a gala dinner in Paris in December 2019, Ulysse Nardin announced that it will be the official timekeeper of the next Vendée Globe, the legendary non-stop solo yacht race. The Manufacture also revealed new models for 2020 to major players in media and retail.
The Laureato Absolute is a sophisticated, contemporary and sports-type mechanism, a distillation of watchmaking expertise. In 2019, Girard-Perregaux unveiled four new variations in this emblematic collection: the Laureato Absolute, Laureato Absolute Chronograph, Laureato Absolute Rock and Laureato Absolute WW.TC, a quartet of singular and assertive timepieces. A play on colors as black as the universe and as blue as the sky makes the Laureato Absolute a natural fit in the Earth to Sky theme.

Girard-Perregaux’s 230-year history is studded with exceptional timepieces. For one of Switzerland’s oldest manufacturers of Haute Horlogerie, technical perfection is only equaled by sharp design, epitomized by the renowned Tourbillon with Three Gold Bridges, a timepiece that won a gold medal at the Paris Universal Exhibition in 1889.

True to its roots, Girard-Perregaux is based in La Chaux-de-Fonds, the home of Swiss watchmaking and a designated UNESCO World Heritage Site. The watchmaker has preserved its Manufacture status by mastering in-house a complete range of horological skills. From design and development to finishing, assembly and production, the Manufacture combines technical craftsmanship with state-of-the-art design, both of which are essential to creating iconic pieces that are constantly renewed.

In 2019, Girard-Perregaux presented a new collection of rare watches under the theme Earth to Sky, a showcase that included the Laureato Absolute, Laureato Absolute Rock, Cosmos, Quasar and Neo-Bridges Earth to Sky Edition. The brand has also enhanced its visual identity to better leverage its unique positioning. In China, the Manufacture named a new brand ambassador, the acclaimed actor Chen Xiao, with a campaign illustrating their shared values: engagement, precision and innovation, and a flair for adding emotion and elegance to everyday life. Lastly, following major renovations, the Manufacture reopened its doors to the public, allowing visitors to discover anew the watchmaker’s history and workshops.
A key moment of 2019 was the opening of a new, fully automated logistics center in Vescovana, just a few kilometers from Kering Eyewear’s headquarters in Padua. The 15,000 square-meter facility enabled the distribution of over 7 million units in 2019, with an average of 28,000 frames shipped daily. The center guarantees end-to-end control over logistics processes, greater efficiency compared to the outsourced model, a shorter lead time and higher quality as a consequence of less manual work. In addition to its impressive avant-garde design, the hub was awarded Silver LEED certification for its sustainability as a green building.

Launched as a startup in 2014, with the support of Kering and the leadership of Roberto Vedovotto, Kering Eyewear was created to develop in-house eyewear expertise for the Group’s brands. This innovative business model involved bringing the entire value chain under Kering’s control, representing a major breakthrough in the industry. Product development, supply chain, sales and marketing, distribution, and business strategies are all managed directly by Kering Eyewear. By working closely with the brands’ creative directors, Kering Eyewear ensures that the DNA and esthetic codes of each House are fully integrated in the development of eyewear.

Fast and agile decision-making is essential to the business model to ensure a swift response to the opportunities and challenges generated by this fast-growing sector. Close collaboration with the Houses is equally important, creating synergies and business growth in shared channels, such as brand boutiques, travel retail, department stores, multi-brand fashion specialists and e-commerce. In total, the distribution network serves some 20,000 customers with 30,000 sales locations in 110 countries.

Among the highlights of 2019 was the addition of Balenciaga, Courrèges and Montblanc to create an unparalleled portfolio of 15 brands with Gucci, Cartier, Saint Laurent, Bottega Veneta, Alexander McQueen, Stella McCartney, Alaïa, Brioni, Boucheron, Pomellato, MCQ and Puma. During the year, Kering Eyewear also opened a new, high-tech logistics center (see above) and acquired a minority stake in one of its key manufacturing partners, Trenti S.p.A., as part of a strategy to further invest in innovation and “Made in Italy” excellence. Meanwhile, a three-year manufacturing agreement with Safilo for the supply of Gucci-branded frames and sunglasses was renewed to 2023.

In 2020 and beyond, Kering Eyewear is committed to fully exploiting the potential of its brands, in both the sun and optical categories. Its strategy is also to expand the company’s presence in new distribution channels, leveraging its expertise and unique positioning in the luxury segment.
